ADJUNCT PROFESSOR or INSTRUCTOR

BIOCHEMISTRY

Kalamazoo College invites applications for a one-course adjunct instructor position for spring term 2020 (March 30 – June 5). The successful applicant will teach an advanced topics course in biochemistry within the Chemistry Department. The course has a cap of 12 students and typically enroll senior chemistry majors with interests in graduate or professional school.

This would be an excellent opportunity for a post-doc or advanced graduate student to gain teaching experience at a primarily undergraduate institution. Furthermore, the Chemistry Department at Kalamazoo College is robust and popular among students with nearly 50 majors in our junior class alone (the College has about 1500 students total). The faculty within the department seek to mentor visiting faculty to prepare them for a future tenure track position at a liberal arts college.

Candidates are expected to have high aptitude and interest in undergraduate teaching. Kalamazoo College has made a commitment to inclusive excellence. We especially encourage applications from candidates whose intellectual and pedagogical approaches to the discipline will be effective in attracting and retaining historically underrepresented students. The successful applicant will demonstrate a strong commitment to working with students, faculty and staff from diverse social, cultural, and economic backgrounds.

Kalamazoo College is a nationally known liberal arts college of approximately 1500 motivated students, offering an integrated undergraduate experience that weaves a traditional liberal arts curriculum into domestic and international educational experiences (www.kzoo.edu). It is a member of the Posse Program and home of the Arcus Center for Social Justice Leadership.
